From students to independent barbers

Jameel: I already had some experience because I worked for two years with my cousins in a women's hair salon in Lebanon. When I came to Belgium, I decided to get my diploma and learn the proper techniques.

Nadeem: During our internship in Portugal, we met many people. We also learned new techniques. It was a very valuable learning experience.

How did you make the step to become self-employed?

Now you run your own barbershop together!

Nadeem: Our father had his own business in Syria, so the desire for independence was there from an early age. We run the barbershop together. Responsibilities are shared: we can rely on each other and take turns.

The hardest part was actually finding a rental space. There was a lot of paperwork, but luckily an acquaintance helped us with that.
